Ever since the Presidential election was settled, negotiations have been going on to bring about the result which was achieved when Mahone cast his first vote on the 14th. He was welcomed into the Republican party with loud demonstrations of joy, first of all by Mr.

Conkling and then by others. Mr. Conkling spoke with particular knowledge when he told the Senate on 11thlinst., "A Constitutional majority of the Senate is against that resolution"to appoint the committees. He was kept informed of, if he did not personally participate in, the bargaining conducted by his political chief of staff and his recogpized organ. And he had no small difficulty in bringing in Mr. Edmunds and others like him. The temptation of returning to conspicuous positions on the enough for the occasion. Before gaing up to the Senate on Monday, 14th inst., Mr. Mahone visited the President at the White House, escorted by George C. Gorham, who wants and expects to age, Mahone played his part and was applauded to the echo.

The death of Senator Carpenter recalls the case of the French bondholders of the Memphis, El Paso and Pacific Railroad against the Texas Pacific. Those bonds were sold in Paris by Gen.
